Abstract

Writings have the way to flow. Sometimes it get path from the author and sometimes make her way itself. British Female novelists like Virginia Woolf, Emily Bronte, George Eliot, Jane Austen, Joanne Harris, Katherine Mansfield, Jeanette Winterson, Angela Carter, Iris Murdoch, Muriel Spark, Doris Lessing, Margaret Drabble, Helen Fielding and Hillary Mantel, Jean Rhys etc have raised the different issues and facets of womanhood. This article discuss about feminine world of British writings. The article has gathered almost all the iconoclasts of British female writings and it involves the writing experience of prominent British female authors on various feminine consequences that have taken place in the history of Britain and dealt with different feminine issues. The article discusses Female writings in British authors. Every writing has been intimately coupled with their perspectives or even directly to the specific flavor. When we examine the feminine writings, find that such writers express the same concerns of feminist theories- the different phases which a female has to undergo and suffer in the male focused society. Female is always underestimated in contrast with the male who is supposed to be the generator of the family name to future generations and is, therefore, more carefully and lovingly brought up and given more advantages as compared to the female child. Woman in reality is essentially a subservient partner in marriage and it often does not mean companionship or equality for her rather it is a trap which negates her rights to individuality, independence and self-realization.

The feminists who reject the institution of marriage also discourage motherhood. They find it another form of slavery as it breaks woman's self-sufficiency. They argue that with the birth of children, woman depends much more on man economically and emotionally.
